Course description and objectives:

Since the end of the Cold War, new forms of global governance have proliferated. Nonstate actors and subnational governments participate directly in governance arrangements; informal formats and soft law often substitute for formal agreements. The course will examine these innovations in global governance across issue-areas, including climate change, global health, and peacebuilding. The role of the United States and other incumbent and emerging powers will be explored. Innovations will be evaluated for their effectiveness and legitimacy.

Required reading: Required reading for the course is available on the Canvas course site, either through links on the site or via library Course Reserves. Direct links for other readings are provided in the syllabus. “Additional sources” are not required reading; those sources are included for use in the second written assignment and for Ph.D. students who choose the option of a research paper. Additional (brief) readings may be substituted throughout the course in light of developments in global politics and the foreign policies of individual states.

Student learning outcomes: At the end of the course, students should

- Have obtained usable knowledge regarding different institutional formats in contemporary global governance.
- Understand the role of different actors (including emerging powers, corporations, NGOs) in global governance.
- Be able to evaluate policy outcomes and institutional performance in global governance institutions.
- Improve their ability to lead and participate in a small-group discussion.
- Improve their ability to write analytic papers and memoranda, individually or as part of a team.

Course requirements and assessment:

Ph.D. students enrolled in the course may complete a research paper (thirty double-spaced pages maximum) on a topic agreed with the instructor OR complete the course requirements below.

The following requirements apply to all other students in the course:

(1) Midterm paper (5-7 double-spaced pages), submitted by 5 PM on Monday, March 1. This take-home assignment will be based on course readings and class discussions. Topics will be distributed on Monday, February 22.

(2) Final analytic paper or policy memorandum (12-15 double-spaced pages), on a topic chosen by each student, submitted by 4 PM on Thursday, April 22. Research for this assignment should include sources beyond the course readings. "Additional sources" on the syllabus may provide a starting point for researching the assignment. The topic may be chosen from the issue areas discussed in the course, or another issue area that displays innovation in global governance. This assignment can be either an individual or a team effort. Instructor's approval in advance of both topic and format (individual or team) is required.

(3) Leadership of discussion in one or more class sessions. In the final sessions of the course, discussion leadership may include a brief summary of the final analytic paper or policy memorandum, described in (2).

(4) Completion of the required reading for all sessions and participation in class discussions. Attendance and participation in class discussions are an important part of the course. During this semester of online instruction, class participation will be evaluated primarily through the posting of discussion questions or responses on Canvas, based on the assigned reading. These posts will usually be due before specific sessions of the course. You may also be asked to lead class discussion in one or more sessions.

Grading policy:

The course grade will be based on the grades received for the midterm paper (30%), the final paper (40%), leadership of discussion (15%), and completion of reading/participation in class discussions (15%).
